Camellia

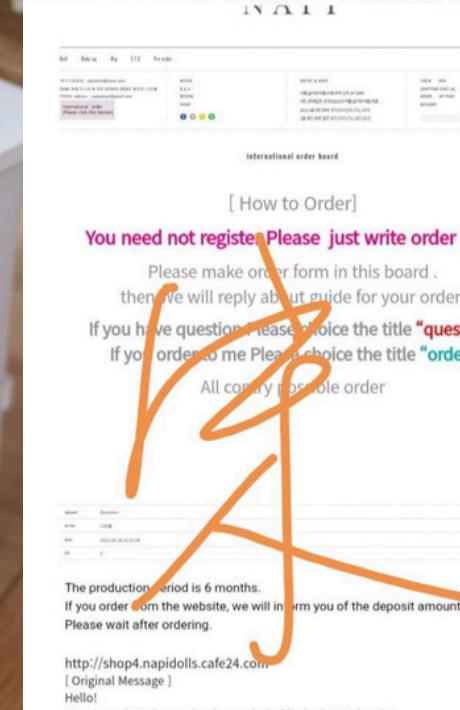

My dearest "friend" (doll) from high school. I waited nearly two years to "build" her. That long wait let her be the recipient of my improved photography and scene designing skills. In my heart, she's always been like waiting for a flower to bloom, or for winter to end and spring to come soon. So it's only natural that I easily associate her with spring flowers.

Josie

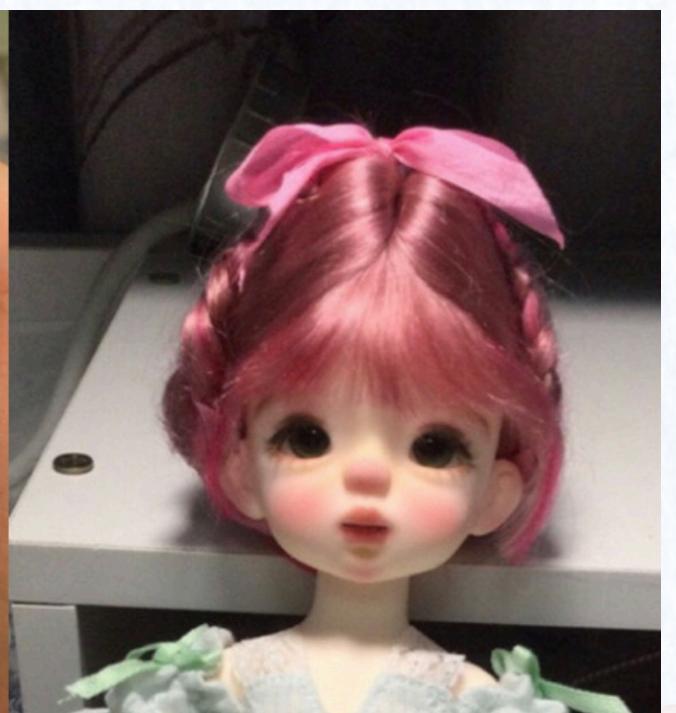

At the start of middle school, I met the first BJD doll in my life. Keeping her company, I unlocked a new world of these dolls little by little. Unfortunately, when the prologue of high school had just begun, this "friend" who had been with me day and night wave goodbye. In my memory, she's like a traditional European-style doll that's always smiling at the world around her.

World View:

In a universe of countless parallel spacetimes, a mysterious Spatio-Temporal Train travels to mend time fractures and restore cosmic balance, powered by repaired spacetimes' leftover memories.

Its passengers are "outliers"—shunned for odd abilities or isolated for era-defying beliefs—summoned to flee their timelines or end broken worlds.

After mutual selection, a Temporal Mark (boarding pass and mission capability indicator) appears in their memories. If they find a resonant timeline/purpose, they may leave, but their original spacetime memories are erased.

Personal Introduction

Born with great power and destined to fulfill his tribe's mission. To realize peace between foxes and humans, he served a human emperor, winning countless battles through the union of magic and strategy. Yet when peace was finally secured, the emperor grew fearful of his strength and race. Branded a traitor, his clan was imprisoned, his comrades slain, and arrows pierced his body as he fell. In his final moments, despair awakened his bloodline, summoning the Spatio-Temporal Train. Clinging to his dream of harmony, he boarded it, seeking a peace no longer built on war.

Personal Introduction

A once-legendary musical theater star, lauded for his ethereal voice and sold-out shows, became an illegal wanderer in the illusionary "Dream Realm" after a temporal collapse. Hiding among warm lamps and false melodies, he clung to memories of the stage, until the Dream Patrol captured him and stripped his sight. Grieving his lost world, he despaired—until a Temporal Mark restored his vision. Answering the Temporal Train's whistle, he boarded, vowing to bring music to those lost between dreams and reality.

Personal Introduction

Born into an ancient vampire lineage, the pure-blooded youth with crimson, blood-manipulating eyes rejected his family's cruel trial: slaughtering eighteen impure-bloods. Witnessing their suffering, he could no longer bear his kin's deceit and cruelty. Ordered to kill his lifelong nursemaid in the final trial, he defied by casting aside his bloody dagger. Branded a family disgrace, he was hunted mercilessly. His nursemaid sacrificing herself to let him escape. As dawn's sunlight scorched him and he collapsed in the forest, a train's whistle echoed: it granted him a sun-tolerant body, and a path to uphold kindness and empathy.
